THIS WORKSHOP IS CREATED FOR GRADES 5+

Join Anishinaabe musician Natasha Fisher in this engaging pre-recorded workshop for grades 5-12. Through storytelling and music, Natasha shares her inspiring journey as a proud Indigenous woman and artist, navigating the challenges and triumphs of her career. Students will explore themes of identity, culture, and resilience while experiencing the power of music as a tool for self-expression and connection. Perfect for learners seeking inspiration and a deeper understanding of Indigenous perspectives through the universal language of music.

We invite students to think about the music they listen to and for educators to facilitate a conversation with the following questions. Are any of their favourite songs ones that were created to make change or raise awareness? Can they think of any songs that have an important message in them?

On the workpage below we invite students to create an album cover for the Moose Hide Campaign. Think about our message and our mission - if we were to create songs that helped inspire people to make change and end violence, what would our album cover look like?
